

Million Dollar Listing: What Happened To Chad Rogers After Leaving The Show

BY VERONICA BRUSH
AUGUST 24, 2024

Chad Rogers looked young on Million Dollar Listing: Los Angeles because he was only 30 when he joined the show in season 2. He left the popular, high-end real estate show in 2009. While there were worries there may have been problems between Chad and the producers of the Bravo show or other cast members, he departed on his own accord. While he left the world of reality TV, he didn't leave the world of high-end real estate.

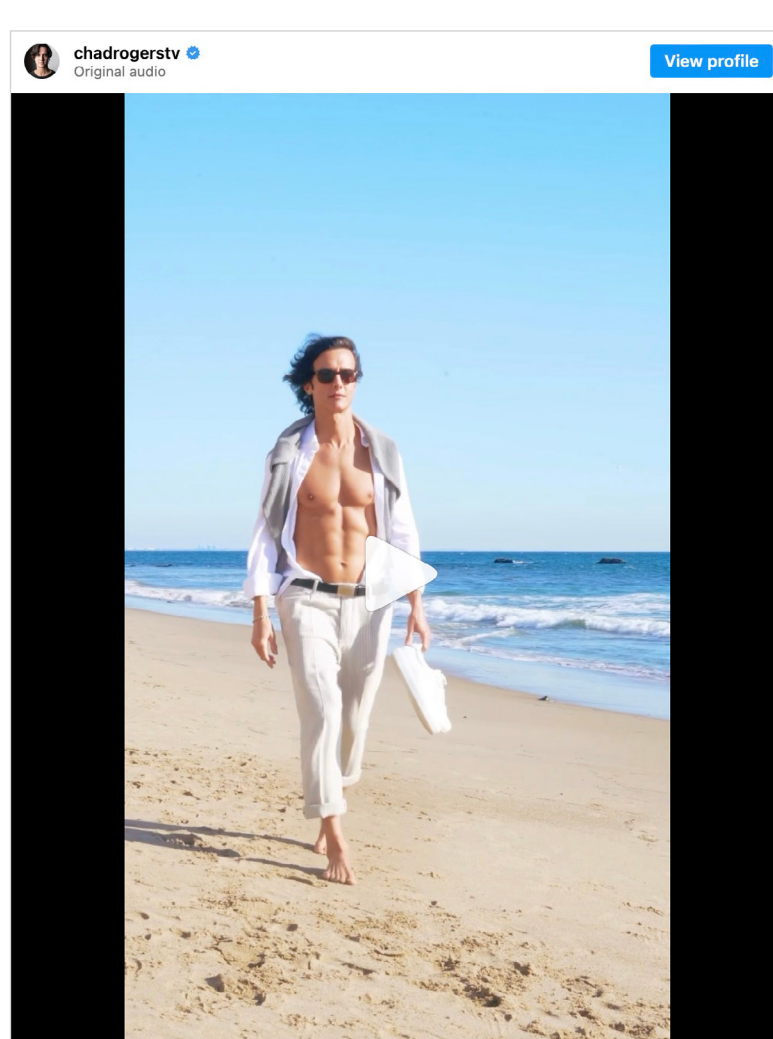

Million Dollar Listing: Los Angeles isn't just about the luxury housing for the rich and famous in Los Angeles; it's also about the competitive real estate agents. With prominent personalities to accompany those big wallets, Million Dollar Listing has been popular enough to get 15 seasons so far and spawn a spin-off in New York City. While season 15 has yet to be announced, Bravo has yet to cancel the show.

Million Dollar Listing's Chad Is Still In High-End Real Estate

Chad may not have enjoyed the drama of the show, but he still appreciates the world of selling expensive homes. He never left Hilton & Hyland, the brokerage featured on the show. His social media is full of pictures and descriptions of his listings, along with successfully sold properties. Like Million Dollar Listing cast member Madison Hildebrand, he never left real estate, he merely left reality TV. He appears successful and endlessly enthusiastic about real estate, so it fits him well. With the prices in L.A., he's picked the correct city to do business in.

Million Dollar Listing's Chad Even Has A Side Hustle

Outside of real estate, Chad keeps busy by focusing on health and fitness. He takes care of himself and wants to help others be healthy, too. To that end, he started an organic food brand with his mother, Raw Raw Land, which he also promotes on social media. It's an unexpected side hustle for someone who regularly sells mansions worth millions, but clearly, Chad has the talent to sell just about anything, including gluten-free chicken jerky.

What Is Chad Up To In 2024?

Chad has changed a lot since his time on Million Dollar Listing: Los Angeles to who he is now in 2024. Like it was mentioned earlier, Chad still works in luxury real estate and has continued that career into 2024. In a recent interview with Heavy from August 4, Chad gave the publication an update on his life and career. Other than still doing real estate in 2024, Chad has also started a music career.

In regards to his real estate career, Chad keeps busy by staying on top of his listing and social networking to get his name and his listings out there to the people. He also mentioned he started playing the guitar again. Chad revealed he stopped playing over six years ago and recently picked it up again because being creative was something he was missing in life. Chad and his friend/guitar teacher, Spencer Carr, have been working together on a "cool project," but Chad didn't reveal much else. It seems like he and Spencer are working together on creating some music.

Chad even started a YouTube channel called Mr. Rogers' 90210, where he visits different places in the Los Angeles area. Chad has visited areas such as Malibu, the Hollywood Hills, and other iconic cities in the area. Since Chad has been working in the business for well over two decades, he has the experience and knowledge to offer people his expertise in LA real estate. Despite his thriving career in real estate and getting started in music, Chad has no want to return to reality TV.

Million Dollar Listing: Los Angeles has continued without him for well over a decade, but Chad seems uninterested in returning to the show. He has made himself the kind of life he enjoys. Not everyone wants fame and drama following them everywhere. Chad seems content to do his dealings without cameras in his face and is no less successful for it.